Michael J. Linneman focuses his practice on trucking, transportation law, premises liability, and general negligence. Mr. Linneman represented creditors and other interested parties before several U.S. Bankruptcy Courts. Clients include: construction contractors, trucking companies, and business and property owners. He has tried several jury and bench trials to verdict and represented clients in dozens of arbitrations. In addition to tort liability, he has also successfully resolved various commercial disputes for his clients.

In his community, he provides pro bono services to the Islamic Thought and Science Institute, an Illinois-based nonprofit organization that seeks to improve the educational resources and opportunities of grade school children in his wife's hometown of Hyderabad, India.

He earned his undergraduate degree from Marquette University, and his J.D. from The John Marshall Law School.
