Adam J. Sedia is an associate in the firm's Northern Indiana office. Since 2010 he has litigated nearly 100 appeals before the Indiana and Illinois appellate courts and the Seventh Circuit in all types of cases, including commercial, tort, family, probate, and criminal appeals. Aside from his appellate practice, Adam represents both plaintiffs and defendants in high-stakes commercial disputes and defends professionals against medical and legal malpractice claims.

In addition to litigation, Adam serves as municipal counsel for various municipalities in Northwest Indiana, where he advises local government authorities on all legal aspects of government. He previously served as president of the Lake County Bar Association.

Adam earned undergraduate degrees in Chemistry and English from Indiana University and received a J.D. from DePaul University College of Law. Aside from his legal work, Adam speaks Spanish and Italian and is a prize-winning poet and published author of both fiction and nonfiction.
