

PHARMACEUTICALS & MEDICAL DEVICES

The Johnson & Bell Pharmaceutical and Medical Device Litigation Group has experience representing and defending large drug and medical device manufacturers as trial counsel and National Coordinating Counsel, including work for the world's largest provider of medical-surgical products and supply chain solutions. These products are used across healthcare settings including products and components connected to pharmaceuticals, medical devices, and cosmetics. Because these cases are complex and highly technical, this work requires both legal expertise and deep scientific and medical knowledge.

J&B lawyers thoroughly understand FDA rules, industry compliance requirements, and product liability law, but beyond legal knowledge, also possess strong scientific and medical understanding in fields like:

- How drugs work in the body (pharmacology);
- How substances may cause harm (toxicology);
- How diseases and health outcomes are studied in populations (epidemiology);
- General medicine; and
- Biomedical engineering (how medical devices are designed and function)
